Feet of Clay

Two recent events illustrate the system's vulnerability.

First, there is the closure of the two largest airports in the United Kingdom following sightings of drones, whose operators have still not been identified.

Second, one of Germany's biggest data breaches has been traced to a 20 year old student living with his parents. Despite lack of computer expertise, he accessed and leaked personal information and documents on 1,000 people, including politicians like Chancellor Merkel and journalists.

Of course, we do NOT encourage either computer hacking or drone attacks!

These two examples simply illustrate that great wealth and great power do not necessarily mean invulnerability. Disproportional results are can be achieved even with extremely limited resources.

Our positon has always been this: Stay LEGAL where we are not banned. Stay NON-VIOLENT even where we are banned.

Activists!

Keep your eyes and minds open!

Friedrich Nietzsche

When Friedrich Nietzsche was born on October 15, 1844 in Röcken near Lützen in the Prussian province of Saxony, his father was certain that he would follow the family tradition and become a Lutheran pastor like his father and grandfather before him. Nobody would have suspected that his son would become the champion of an anti-Christian teaching and a confirmed atheist in later life. When he was five years old, Nietzsche's father died. His mother took over his education in a household that included both of his aunts, his grandmother and his sisters.

Early in life Nietzsche became interested in poetry and he composed his first poems at the age of ten. After completing high school in 1864 in Silesian Naumburg, Nietzsche decided to follow his own interests and study theology and classical philosophy at the University of Bonn. In 1865 he followed his teacher to Leipzig and completed his education. Strongly influenced by ancient aesthetics and the works of Arthur Schopenhauer, Nietzsche met Richard Wagner in 1868, himself an enthusiastic follower of Schopenhauer. During the next ten years Wagner and Nietzsche met several times and they had a significant influence on each other.

In February 1869 Nietzsche became a professor for Greek language and literature in Basel. At the age of 24 he delivered a speech about "Homer and Greek Philology" that won him great acclaim by the critics. In 1871 the patriot Nietzsche volunteered to serve as a medic during the Franco-German War. After the Second German Empire was founded on January 18, 1871, Nietzsche complained that Germany's political union had not been accompanied by an intellectual union. Years later he criticized every aspect of Germany. The young and ambitious Nietzsche published his first main work in 1872: "The Birth of Tragedy from the Spirit of Music". This gave him an opportunity to express his feelings. This work dealt with cultural issues whose intellectual development led Nietzsche to his own primary problem: morality.

In addition to his acquaintance with famous theologians and philosophers, Nietzsche especially nurtured his friendship with Richard Wagner. However, starting in 1876 signs of alienation between the two men started to appear and they finally ended their friendship. The cause was their difference of opinion regarding Christianity and morality. Nietzsche rejected a narrow devotion to Christianity and its "slave morality", which he viewed as anti-life. He declared: "God is dead!"

When his steadily deteriorating health compelled him to give up his professorship in French “yellow jacket” protestors, many thousands strong, are waging an impressive fight against the globalist regime in that country.

Initially a protest against fuel prices, targets have expanded to include the news media and even Jewry.

One of the protestors, boxing champion Christophe Dettinger, has become their symbol and inspiration.

After he and his family were tear-gassed by the police, he went on the offensive with his bare fists. His fierce counterattack was captured on u-tube. He turned himself in to the police and went to jail.

Unfortunately, his fundraising web-site was removed after pledges quickly surpassed 100,000 Euro.

Dettinger: “I am a yellow vest. I have the anger of the people in me.”

The UNITED PATRIOTS FRONT urged their countrymen to rally at St Kilda Beach in Melbourne and “take back the beach” from “African crime gangs”.

Hundreds of police were present. One man was arrested for weapon possession.

Participants included Australian Senator Fraser Anning, who reportedly once made a favorable reference to the so-called “Final Solution”.

One of the organizers reportedly once recommended hanging a Hitler picture in every classroom in the country.

Spokesmen for the usual anti-White organizations have complained about the rise of “anti-Semitism” in Australia in recent years. Spy chief Duncan Lewis told the Senate that “right-wing extremism” is a “threat”, adding that it was becoming “a little better organized than they have been in the past”, and that his agency “monitoring” these activity “very, very closely”.

The ANTIPODEAN RESISTANCE donated decorations to the Emmy Monash Aged Care facility in Melbourne. Similar decorations have turned up at many locations throughout Australia.

Unfortunately, no good deed goes unpunished. Critics claim “anti-Semitic” incidents in 2018 set a record for “largest single-year increase”.

The benefactors’ web-site briefly went down when the domain “antipodeanresistance.info” was “frozen”, but quickly returned with the new domain name “antipodeanresistance.com”.

The Antipodean Resistance describes itself as "the Hitlers you've been waiting for". Its 300 members are White, straight, young, monogamous, and only date within the White race.

“We are telling you that we are all around you. We build your houses, we cook your meals, and we keep your shelves stocked,” a member told Daily Mail Australia in 2018.

Friedrich Nietzsche

Basil in 1879, he worked as an independent philosopher for the next ten years and created his greatest works. Writing in different locations, mostly in Italy, he published "Human, All Too Human" (1880), "Dawn" (1881) and "The Joyful Science (1882). In all three works Nietzsche portrayed man as a creature possessing the freedom to choose its own virtues, customs and morals. However, Nietzsche's concept of "the rejection of traditional values" was not centered on the individual, rather the goal was to create a selective, culture-creating super-humanity with its own "master morality". Nietzsche's philosophical masterpiece was achieved in the four volumes of "Thus Spoke Zarathustra" (1883-1885), where he confirmed his theory in poetic style. In the years 1886 and 1887 "Beyond Good and Evil" and "A Genealogy of Morals" followed. Further shorter works like "The Case of Wagner" (1888), "The Anti-Christ" (published in 1894) and "Nietzsche contra Wagner" (1895) continued his atheistic and anti-Christian life-view.

Following his nervous breakdown in January 1889 in Turin, Italy, he was admitted into a psychiatric institution at the University of Jena in Germany. His mother looked after him and after her death his sisters did so. He never regained his sanity and he died on August 25, 1990 in Weimar.

Friedrich Nietzsche was one of the greatest Aryan philosophers and thinkers as well as the guideline giver for the philosophy of existence. The National Socialist writer Karl Schlectas wrote this about him:

"Within the context of the movement – triggered by the reformation – seeking the final origin and basis of human nature, Nietzsche tried the most forcibly to liberate himself from the old values of cultural heritage."
